The Perfect Bite* Episode #12: Trying Out Casa Don Juan and Financial Safety on Social Media

In this twelfth bite, join co-hosts Crystal Price and Shannon Hiller from Clark County Credit Union as they trust recommendations for new meals to try at Casa Don Juan, discuss what financial information is okay to share online, and share cybersecurity tips to keep your privacy safe on social media. Hear the difference between flautas and taquitos, how Millennials and Gen X compare in terms of sharing financial info on social media, and why you should think twice before answering fun questions online. This episode covers everything from tasty Mexican food to online privacy. Here's a small sample of what you will hear in this episode:

- How was Casa Don Juan?
- Has Shannon had flautas before?
- Does mole sauce have chocolate in it?
- What financial information would you share on social media for $100?
- Would it be helpful to share your salary on social media?
- Is Crystal more open to sharing financial info with friends and family?
- How do generations differ in sharing financial info online?
- Why should you take a fresh look at your friends list?
